is a comprehensive work on an emerging dimension of critical security challenges for Asia-Pacific countries.

The central argument of the book is that in the post-Cold War era, the traditional military definition of security has changed, requiring a rethinking of the strategies and methods adopted to confront new threats.

East Asia Imperilled: Transnational Challenges to Security ...

Security issues have traditionally been defined in military terms, yet the post-Cold War security landscape contains numerous non-military challenges to security. In this pathbreaking analysis, Alan Dupont argues that an emerging new class of non-military threats has the potential to destabilize East Asia and reverse decades of hard-won Transnational threats stem from overpopulation, deforestation and pollution, global warming, unregulated population movements, transnational crime and virulent new strains of infectious diseases. This highly informative, compelling and authoritative book is essential reading for East Asia specialists and makes a significant and timely contribution to international security debates.

East Asia Summit signals India will pursue bilateral pacts with ASEAN countries In the absence of taking on the Chinese dragon, the focus has been on emphasising ASEAN centrality. While this is a given in almost every ASEAN partner's statement, the reiteration in various documents this time gives the impression that the centrality of ASEAN is actually under challenge.

Violent extremism remains a significant challenge for South-East Asia, but in no country does it pose an existential threat. In Indonesia, Malaysia, Myanmar, the Philippines and Thailand, governments have the capacity to prevent it, while at the same time they should understand that it is unlikely to disappear completely.
