Tape for the Turn of the Year is a dianistic poem written over a few days in the mid 60's on a roll of adding tape. In it, Ammons endeavors to give himself and the readers space, the blue of the sky without view of the clouds, the ground, or the sun. It works, and the reader gets to see him in all his foolishness and genius.

Tape for the Turn of the Year by A.R. Ammons

"Tape for the Turn of the Year" by A.R. Ammons I'm not really sure where A.R. Ammons stands or will stand in "the canon." Despite receiving numerous major awards and grants during his lifetime, he remains (I think) more of a footnote than a figure in 20th century American poetry, a sort of weird bastard of Whitman's transcendentalism, Stevens's imaginative powers, and Williams's colloquial rhetoric.

Tape for the Turn of the Year

A.R. Ammons, who was born in 1926 in Columbus County, North Carolina, reached the summit of his career when his big Collected Poems: 1951-1971 was received with admiration and prizes, including the 1973 National Book Award for Poetry. But one work, Tape for the Turn of the Year, which was published in 1965, was presumably too long for inclusion in the Collected Poems; and the omission, however understandable, could unjustly draw our attention away from a unique poem that remains one of ...

The Mind's Music: TAPE FOR THE TURN OF THE YEAR By A.R. ...

Writing in the Ontario Review, Stevens argued that the "ongoing flux" in Tape for the Turn of the Year—a long poem composed on an adding machine tape—works as "an almost perfect method to allow his notion of organic form to function," but that "no such wedding of form and content" occurs in another long poem, Sphere: The Form of a Motion.

A. R. Ammons | Poetry Foundation

This book length poem was written with several things in mind. First, the title is literal. Ammons wanted to write a poem confined in length and width by composing the entire poem on a roll of adding machine tape, and the result was a diary of the last part of one year and the beginning of another.

Tape For the Turn Of the Year by Ammons, A R

Tape for the Turn of the Year by A. R. Ammons (1965) The long poem was a form made for Ammons, with its space to wander around, contradict himself, and turn equally to matters quotidian and cosmic, as he does in this lovely experiment that, in a sort of serious joke on Kerouac, he composed on a single piece of adding machine tape from December 1963 to early January 1964.

The Millions: Tape for the Turn of the Year by A. R. Ammons

He chose this method as a serious experiment in making a poem adapt to something outside itself. The tape determined both the length of the poem's lines and when it ends. Tape for the Turn of the Year is a poem of infinite variety, blessed by the rich resources of one of this century's greatest poets. By turns witty, serious, lyrical, and meditative, it is at once a superbly entertaining book and a significant literary achievement.
